Genetics

9 As if genetics research was not complicated enough, scientists are trying to find ways to balance the role of genes with the effects of environment. But a simplistic view of the issue is making it hard to get the message across, says Richard Butler.

Cars

Alternative energy

13 In the first of a regular series of articles about alternative energy, Simon Robinson examines what will drive the global markets for energy over the next 25 to 50 years. Although there are no obvious technology or commercial winners yet in the race for renewables, there are plenty of possibilities for innovation in energy delivery techniques.

Cars

Fuel cells

15 Graham Hards and Lu Potter from the business development group of Johnson Matthey fuel cells, catalysts and chemicals division, talk to C&I about an exciting business opportunity. Graham Johnson of Unicam Instruments explains how a hand-held analyser revolutionises the philosophy of electrochemistry. Stuart Curry talks to the organisers of Electrochem 2002 to find out what is really happening in the industry at the moment.
